

Toddler

Toddler is an extension of the One Minute Game suited for small kids to play. It is not played simultaneously. The game is a puzzle-like race in an attempt to reach the other side of the table. Toddler is not limited to two players, you can play it with twice as many players as you own copies of the One Minute Game.

Preparations — The kids all take a seat on the same side of a table. A long table is useful when playing with many kids. The kids play in a space of on their own each, so leave enough room between them.

Each kid takes a set of 36 cards, shuffles and places it as a drawing pile within reach. Then everyone draws a card and puts it face up in front of them, touching their side of the table.

Playing field with two kids ready to go.

The game — Unlike the One Minute Game, Toddler is played in rounds. At the beginning of each round all kids draw the top card of their drawing pile. They then try to place it on the table while respecting the placement rules. If a card does not fit, the kids throw it face up on their personal discard pile.

The round ends when every kid has either played or discarded their card. The kids wait for each other to finish the round before everyone draws a new card.

If a kid runs out of cards to draw, she flips the entire discard pile and uses it as the new drawing pile.

Placing rules — The Toddler placing rules correspond with the ones from the One Minute Game except for placing condition 3.

The cards are placed so that the coloured semicircles face left and right. When placing a card, it has to connect to at least one own card edge-to-edge and has to match all surrounding cards in colour and shape.

Usually the kids each have their own space on the table where they don't interfere with another. If nevertheless the cards of two kids collide, they don't have to fit in either colour or shape.

End of game — The game ends when a kid build cards up to the other side of the table. That kid wins. When two kids reach the other side of the table in the same round, they share the victory.
